Over a hundred years later, any information linked to the myth of Atlantis was considered incredibly speculative. Though, there have been professionals, such as cartographer Abraham Ortelius, that have made significant findings. Ortelius was actually one of the first to believe that all continents were connected before eventually separating.

Over the last few years, concrete claims to the city of Atlantis have been few and far between. One exception though came in 2015 when German computer expert Michael Hubner theorized that Morocco was potentially home to the ancient ruins. After gathering clues from Plato's accounts and highlighting all the areas within a 3000-mile radius of Athens, his search eventually led him to the North African country. You may be wondering, what could have led Hubner to such a random country?

Atlantis and Lemuria had prospered for a full zodiacal era (2,160 years), when the great cataclysm destroyed their common world, at the end of the Pleistocene, some 11,600 years ago. The scant survivors of the cataclysm that sunk Lemuria away were forced to flee their destroyed Paradise, moving first to India, the site of Atlantis, which had been spared in its northern, loftier portion.

Indonesia is the real site of Atlantis, that now lies at the bottom of the South China Sea. Moreover, we also present pages on the reality of the Flood, the cataclysm that sunk Atlantis away, at the end of the Pleistocene Ice Age. This event took place 11,600 years ago, precisely the date given by Plato in his dialogues on Atlantis. We also argue the civilizing influence of Atlantis over ...
