One should note that the law applicable to the arbitration procedure is a different concept to the law applicable to the substance¹. When parties are drafting an arbitration agreement, they mostly specify the seat of arbitration. The choice of seat is not a physical choice but rather it is a legal choice that allocates the arbitration law applicable to the arbitration procedure. For instance ...

The procedural law in an arbitration is different from the governing law of the contract: this is the law by which the arbitration will operate (such as the UNCITRAL Model Law). The procedural law is normally the law relating to arbitration in the seat of the arbitration. It is not advisable to specify in the arbitration clause a different procedural law from the procedural law in the seat of ...
